Lesson 1- Introduction

Philosophy is the study of general and fundamental problems concerning matters such as existence, knowledge, values, reason, mind, and language.^[R] It is distinguished from other ways of addressing fundamental questions (such as mysticism, myth, or the arts) by its critical, generally a systematic approach and its reliance on rational argument.^[R] The word "philosophy" comes from the Greek philosophia (philosophia), which literally means "love of wisdom".

1.1 The following branches are the main areas of study:

- Metaphysics is the study of the nature of being and the world. Traditional branches are cosmology and ontology.
- Epistemology is concerned with the nature and scope of knowledge, and whether knowledge is possible. Among its central concerns has been the challenge posed by skepticism and the relationships between truth, belief, and justification.
- Ethics, or "moral philosophy", is concerned with questions of how persons ought to act if such questions are answerable. The main branches of ethics are meta-ethics, normative ethics, and applied ethics. Meta-ethics concerns the nature of ethical thought, comparison of various ethical systems, whether there are absolute ethical truths, and how such truths could be known. Ethics is also associated with the idea of morality. Platonic early dialogues include a search for definitions of virtue.
- Political philosophy is the study of government and the relationship of individuals and communities to the state. It includes questions about justice, the good, law, property, and the rights and obligations of the citizen.
- Aesthetics deals with beauty, art, enjoyment, sensory-emotional values, perception, and matters of taste and sentiment.
- Logic is the study of valid argument forms. Beginning in the late 19th century, mathematicians such as Peano focused on a mathematical treatment of logic, and today the subject of logic has two broad divisions: mathematical logic (formal, symbolic logic) and what is now called philosophical logic.
- Philosophy of mind deals with the nature of the mind and its relationship to the body, and is typified by disputes between dualism and materialism. In recent years there has been increasing similarity between this branch of philosophy and cognitive science.
- Philosophy of language is inquiry into the nature, origins, and usage of language.
- Philosophy of religion is a branch of philosophy that asks questions about religion.
