11:10–11:30 AM

Prioritizing Frontline Workers during the COVID-19 Pandemic

Prof. Nancy S. JECKER

Professor of Bioethics & Humanities

University of Washington Medical School, United States

Visiting Professor, CUHK Centre for Bioethics

In this presentation, the author argues that during pandemic emergencies after standard triage criteria are applied, frontline workers with workplace exposure to infected patients should be accorded first priority in the allocation of scarce medical resources. This group would include not only physicians and nurses, but also respiratory therapists and any other healthcare workers who are required to enter a room while an infected patient is present. The next priority should be given to essential non-medical personnel. The arguments in support of these claims appeal to narrow social utility, social contract, reciprocity, and respect for persons.

11:30–11:45 AM

Using a Public Health Ethics Framework to Unpick Discrimination in COVID-19 Responses

Prof. Roger Y. N. CHUNG

Associate Director, Institute of Health Equity;

Assistant Professor

JC School of Public Health and Primary Care, CUHK

In the face of the COVID-19 pandemic, various laws, policies, and measures relating to public health have been implemented with the primary purpose of protecting the health of the public; these are widely understood as being the main utilitarian goals of public health. A public health ethical framework is applied to help determine whether the utilitarian objective of promoting public health warrants overriding non-utilitarian values, such as liberty and autonomy of action, privacy and confidentiality, transparency in the disclosure of important information, the building of trust and keeping of commitments, as well as justice and fairness.

11:45 AM–12:00 noon

Reopening Economies
during the COVID-19 Pandemic: Reasoning
about Value Tradeoffs

Prof. Hon-lam LI

Deputy Director, CUHK Centre for Bioethics;

Professor, Department of Philosophy, CUHK

Various ethical issues have been arisen from the COVID-19 pandemic, such as the policy of herd immunity, the issue of reopening economies, and whether the wearing of masks should be made mandatory. Any plausible solution to these issues would involve a tradeoff of values. This presentation brings the ethical theory of contractualism to bear on these issues, while the concepts of utilitarianism and majority rule are also discussed.

12:00 noon–12:15 PM

Q&A Session
